

With an elevated money supply, New Light CBD persons had more cash to spend and consumption rose, leading to economical growth according to Keynesian theory. However, this as well created economical volatility because some greedy banks loaned out too much money that they were struggling to meet up with the withdrawal requests. This resulted in the establishment of Central Banking institutions, where there was only a standardized and centralized type of receipt money known as the national currency.

The objective of Central Banking institutions was to regulate the fractional reserve system. However, these Central Banks were profit-driven personal banking cartels, not possessed by the government. Solutions implemented to resolve problems actually induced them to escalate as these big finance institutions now managed the money supply of nations.
